

Senate refuses to pass package that urges peace

by John Bachman
Staff Writer

The Student Senate defeated a Peace Package Wednesday night after spending over an hour debating it and watering it down.

The Peace Package encouraged California's legislature to pass its resolution urging the president and Congress to take steps toward decreasing the tension between the United States and the USSR.

The Student Senate cut out provisions of the resolution which called for the halting of research and deployment of nuclear weapons including the Pershing II in West Germany.

The senate also amended the Peace Package to say that it was the opinion of Student Senators and not the whole student body, but the resolution still failed.

The resolution's author Julie Clayton, student senator from the school of Human Development and Education, asked for one week to rework the resolution, but the senate called for a vote. The Peace Package was defeated 13-8 with two abstentions.

"I wish the Student Senate would have allowed me to take the resolution back and rework it," said Clayton. "I'm very disappointed it didn't pass."

During the debate, Clayton said, "A yes vote means we are concerned about the future of the race and the planet." But many senators felt it was inappropriate for the Student Senate to take a stand on social issues.

"The senate should deal with issues which affect our education," said Senator Scott Rogers, from Agriculture and Natural Resources. "That is what we were elected to do. We are trying to tackle the government's job."

Rogers said that social issues should be dealt with through the Mustang Daily and KCPR. A special section should be set up, he said, which would inform students of meetings or people to contact about social issues.

Some senators worried about the time it would take for the Student Senate to deal with social issues. "If we encourage social issues," said Senator Gena Nonini from Agriculture and Natural Resources, "we won't have time to vote on educational issues."

"I have some reservations about social issues," said Senator Lars Perner from Communicative Arts and Humanities, "but the reason I voted for it was I think we should do anything we can to deal with this situation."

Lawyer warns of illegal surveillance in 1984

by Catherine Aaron
Special to the Daily

Reading about Winston Smith being captured and tortured for "thought crimes" in George Orwell's "1984," we think "this doesn't happen in America; this could never happen to me."

Yet unethical surveillance techniques are committed in this country, according to a lecture given Thursday by local attorney James B. Maguire III.

Maguire cited nine cases in which police or secret agents had violated a person's civil rights, and the role defense attorneys played in reprimanding them.

The Los Angeles Police Department conducted a domestic spy program from 1970 to 1981. The American Civil Liberties Union finally brought them to court for illegally spying on some 1,000 persons and organizations, Maguire said. On college campuses agents were hired to follow students to as well as inside their classes at California State University at Northridge. Undercover agents enrolled at the University of California Los Angeles in 1975 to keep tabs on professors by submitting reports on class discussions.

"Our inclination is to think 'this is not fiction,' but this is futurism...it's what we're getting to," Maguire said.

With improved technology, rooms and phones can be bugged invisibly and inaudibly. Hidden microphones can be easily slid into coat pockets and recorded conversations undetected. Satellite photographs can spot an item as small as a pack of cigarettes.

"Through hidden cameras we've seen people caught in the act and convicted, such as congressmen taking bribes and John DeLorean sitting there with a bag of cocaine in his lap," Maguire added.

What is reasonable or unreasonable is not always agreed upon in court. Any activity "in plain view" is fair evidence, so agents can legally follow and observe people in public places.

In his lecture titled "Big Brother is Watching You", James B. Maguire III, a local attorney with the firm of Maguire and Ashbaugh, discussed the state of the law and its application.

Faculty challenge Task Force recommendations

by John Bachman
Staff Writer

Faculty from both the natural resources management and child development and home economics departments are voicing criticisms of the President's Task Force on Reorganization of the university.

The Task Force recommended that two of the natural resources options—parks and outdoor recreation and environmental services—be phased out.

The Task Force also recommended that fisheries and wildlife management be moved to biological sciences and that the natural resources management department be renamed forest resources department. The current forest resources management option would form the new department.

"The department's two most viable programs are being destroyed for one which sits on shaky ground," said natural resources management professor Jack Whalle. "The foresters have cannibalized this department."

Natural resources management professor Ralph Monteen agreed, "Our department has four separate entities, and with a declining enrollment a hard decision had to be made. It's an unfortunate situation for our students."

Each of natural resources four options have one-quarter of the department's students but the options being phased out are inter-disciplinary with their faculty spread among different departments.

"We don't belong to anyone," said James Vilkitis, a professor in the environmental services department, planned to be phased out. "We don't fit anywhere so we have no one to come to bat for us. We have less than one professor to control more than 50-percent of the students."

Natural resources management department head Norm Pillsbury said the Task Force decided to keep the programs which are focused and have a polytechnic emphasis. "I was taken off guard by the in-depth recommendations, but it was a time for tough decisions."

Faculty members also complained about the process the Task Force followed. "The process worked backwards," said Vilkitis. "They made their decision and then they went around and got input. We are up in arms around here about the way it was done."

Natural resource faculty also criticized their department head and his ability to remain unbiased. "I think he behaved like a forester instead of a department head," said Monteen. "He promoted his own interest instead of that of the department."

Faculty members in child development and home economics were split over the Task Force's recommendation. "I want to see the effects carefully weighed," said home economics associate professor Barbara Weber. "The dilemma for home economics programs is that the administration doesn't understand the complex issues; I hope they are patient." Weber went on to say that the changes would weaken the home economics department and they could lose their accreditation.

Home economics professor Dave Englund said the child development department students supported the move and pointed out that the home economics department was accredited before it merged with child development.

Tomlinson Fort, provost and chair of the Task Force on reorganization stressed that the Task Force will meet again to make changes in their recommendation before it is sent to President Baker for final approval.

The bare necessities

A decent place for their stuff. That's all the 30 business faculty members who are roughing it out in Modoc are asking for. Modoc is the faculty office building moved behind the library fall quarter, when construction of the new engineering building began.

The displaced instructors have had to deal with a 42-year old wooden decaying building, which the university had initially intended to demolish. They have also been forced to deal with poorly equipped restroom facilities, poor lighting and heating and no walkways. The instructors filed complaints when they first moved in because they weren't provided with lighting, telephones, heating or security the first four weeks after the move.

A university professor requires an office. This fact cannot be debated. That office should be complete with the necessary facilities for an instructor to properly consult with students, do necessary research, grade papers and prepare for classes.

A teacher should not be forced to spend time looking for some type of heating to warm an office, find proper lighting, search for a working telephone or write the provost a list of grievances concerning what should otherwise automatically be provided—an adequate, convenient and comfortable office.

Whose responsibility is it to improve the conditions of faculty offices? The university claims the problems are beyond its control. Because of this, the instructors have filed a list of eight grievances with the provost's office against the California State University Board of Trustees.

Thirty business faculty members will have to wait 28 more days in their offices while the administration weeds its way through bureaucratic red tape before responding to the complaint.

Four months is long enough for the faculty to endure inadequate office conditions. We urge the administration to take action and improve the offices now. They are scheduled to remain at the present site until spring of 1985. The professors of Modoc cannot be expected to perform at their peak if they must work in primitive office conditions.

Campus drinking is reality; illegal, but done responsibly

Editor:

Cal Poly's "dry campus" policy has been under fire constantly in the last five to 10 years. Upperclassmen and alumni talk about how it haunted their dorm lives, and students at other colleges chide us about not being able to drink in our rooms. Even the resident directors and advisers complain about having to waste time on write-ups. With all this opposition, maybe the members of the Board of Directors will change their stand on drinking.

I hope that they don't.

Presently, Cal Poly has one of the best looking campuses in California; the grass is green and isn't littered with empty alcohol containers. The streets aren't cluttered with discarded leftovers, and the stench of alcohol isn't prominent in the dorm hallways. What does this mean? Cal Poly dorm students have abstained from drinking? No, the students have been drinking. On Saturday and Sunday mornings, isolated caches of empty beer bottles can be found, usually in the trash can or in a paper bag, and the outside trash bins will be stacked with the illegal containers. But where is all the mess, clutter and destruction that is so prominent on other campuses? Look hard, because it won't be found. Although many students wouldn't admit this, the drinking populace of the on-campus dorms has learned to drink responsibly.

Evidently this responsibility carries over into the study habits of the students. Two of the qualities that the business, industrial, and agricultural worlds respect are responsibility and a Cal Poly diploma. What does this have to do with drinking on campus? Well, since smuggling booze into the dorms is a hassle, students usually save what little they have for the weekends. Limited weekend drinking frees students to do what they came here to do—learn.

I don't think that the authorities who implemented the "dry campus" policy saw its effect in the same manner as I have just described. Yet I hope those that would do away with it will take the time to analyze the effect of a "wet campus" policy.

Professor says myths in black history

by Sherman Turnline
Staff Writer

Historians don't always accurately portray the black movement, a Stanford history professor told a Cal Poly audience Wednesday night.

Claybourne Carson, author of many articles on the 1960's black movement said that instead of teaching, history often gives a false message.

"Myths combine truth and untruth, but history's job is to get to the reality."

The lecture, titled "Black Power and Black Consciousness: The Legacies of the Black Movement," was centered on Carson's book, "In Struggle: SNCC and the Black Awakening of the 1960's."

Carson said the Civil Rights movement was viewed as a struggle for civil rights and not a black struggle. He said the one point overlooked in this time was the blacks desire to gain freedom immediately. The broader movement to get a change in the status quo of Blacks is important, he said.

Privacy becoming more elusive

Maguire cited the case of People vs. Arno, in which a man spied on and found to have pornographic films in his apartment. The court called it an unreasonable search, since he was in a private place.

The concept of "expectation of privacy" was created to define places where citizens could expect to be free from surveillance. Even these instances are fuzzy. One can expect privacy in one's garage, if it is attached or close to his house; in one's yard—backyard only; and from being incriminated by materials in one's trash can, unless it is a public dumpster.

"In many cases you don't know if you have the expectation of privacy. Even as lawyers, we're not sure," he said. Another example is that airplanes can fly and use what they can see as evidence, but evidence secured by helicopters hovering 20 feet over one's house is illegal.

"Private citizens can be prosecuted for wire-tapping and eavesdropping, but who prosecutes police? Hopefully, we (defense attorneys) do."

In the 1968 Lee vs. Florida case, police rigged a four-person partyline in the home of a suspected gambler. They made tapes used to convict the defendant. The case went on to the Supreme Court which ruled that such a surveillance was a violation of the Federal Communications Commission.

The Court further researched and found that no police had ever been prosecuted for wiretapping, and were not likely to be. The remedy decided upon to deter police from illegal surveillance was the Exclusionary Rule, which says that all evidence obtained illegally could not be used in court.

"The Constitution is indefinite, and do existing statutes and ordinances really protect us (from unethical surveillance)? What is left? Lawyers," stated Maguire. "Lawyers who point out law officers disobeying the law in criminal cases."

"We don't win any popularity contests. The public thinks our job is to get criminals off...we're unpopular with police officers and our own clients sometimes."

Maguire said that while there is no threat of an immediate revolution and we need not fear "Big Brother," we should fear relinquishing our privacy in small bits and pieces.

"How do we prevent "1984" from happening? Public defense is a way, but it's a stressful job and people get burned out."

Maguire pointed out the small $250,000 annual budget received for the seven district attorneys in San Luis Obispo.

Maguire said that his generation in the 1960s was known as anti-establishment, but have grown up and taken their places in society.

"Your generation is known as out to get the bucks...but I encourage you to have ideals, and to protect them, or they'll be taken away," he concluded.

Senate debates over discussing social issues

Other senators voting yes on the Peace Package were; Ramirez, Ekman, LaForce, Robbins, Clayton, Auyong and Otteson.

Senators voting no; Pollard, Pearce, Colombini, Rogers, Lin, Edmondson, Taylor, Schipper, Amenta, Sunderland, Dunlap, Hammond and ASI Vice President Sommer.

Senators Nonini and Creighton abstained.

In other action the senate passed a Foreign Language Requirement resolution which opposes a system-wide requirement. The resolution recommends that each campus evaluate the impact of such a requirement on its departments and address the issue at its own campus.

The resolution is similar to one passed by the Academic Senate, Senator Kevin Creighton said. Campus by campus is a lot better way to deal with the requirement, giving a lot more flexibility with more control to each of the campus' student and faculty, he said.

"The civil rights movement was a means not an end of a struggle."

In relation to how the March on Washington, D.C. that was led by Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. is portrayed in history books, Carson responded by saying that the march was for jobs and freedom—not for passage of the civil rights bill.

Carson pointed out that in the black struggles of the 1960's people moved first and then the leaders followed, contrary to the portrayal we see in the media. "Many events were not organized by one leader or national organizations. Most sit-ins, boycotts and other events were started by community organizations that in the process produce leaders and national organizations," said Carson.

The decline in the 1980's in the black movement was due in part, said Carson, to the loss of the 'grass roots' movements within the communities.

For blacks in the 1970's, the movement diversified, according to Carson. He said all the movements went in separate directions and there was a loss of community organizations.

In reference to Jesse Jackson, Carson said that Jackson brings a different aspect to the Democratic Presidential nomination than the other candidates, but added that Jackson has been very vague about his campaign platform.

The most important thing that Carson is concerned about with Jesse Jackson's run for President, is what's going to happen in the long term with his organizations and the black community after the election.

Jerry Siebert, director of USC Extension Berkeley, spoke on a variety of agricultural topics in an Ag Extension lecture Wednesday.

Top agriculture official addresses water problem

by Rebecca Prough

Staff Writer

The primary issue facing the agriculture industry in the 1980s is the capture and conservation of water, the director of the University of California's Cooperative Extension told Cal Poly students and faculty Thursday.

Dr. Jerome Siebert spoke to approximately 120 people about "Agricultural Extension and the Next Decade." Siebert stressed the importance of having enough water for productive agriculture and the role Agricultural Extension plays in the agriculture business.

Siebert said that more than enough water falls annually, but the problem is capturing and storing the water. He said the state can only capture 40 million acre-feet of water annually, but needs 42 million acre-feet for the most successful agriculture.

Cooperative Extension concentrates on the policies that deal with the water shortage, the conservation and management of water, and water development, he said.

"We are trying to bring together local and statewide consideration, and we want to get the water policy back on course," Siebert said.

Siebert said two other important issues facing agriculture are integrated pest management and better marketing techniques.

"California is like a nation and marketing is a real challenge for California agriculture in the '80s and '90s," he said.

The Cooperative Extension, also called Agricultural Extension by Siebert, is part of a three-way partnership in which Federal, State and county governments share in planning and financing education programs through the University of California. The three levels of government interpret, adjust, and disseminate information concerning the latest developments in agriculture.

Siebert explained that Agricultural Extension programs have grown in the past few years, and there are now 54 county offices throughout California. There are farm, youth and home advisers in each county office.

The advisers are responsible for providing educational programs at the local level, and there are about 350 professional advisers, Siebert said.

The Agricultural Extension program's budget is approximately $47 million a year, and the total workforce is 1,100 people. "You can look on us as somewhat of a small campus without walls," Siebert said.

The program works with agricultural research services and wants to have a closer relationship with university faculties, he added.

Extension specialists help both small- and large-scale farmers solve everyday problems.

"The primary focus is on the family farm and the primary supporters of Agricultural Extension are family farmers," Siebert said.

Siebert said career opportunities in the Agricultural Extension program are good. He said if a student wants a career on the frontiers of science and knowledge, Agricultural Extension is a good opportunity to do so.

Siebert's lecture was sponsored by the student council of the university's School of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

Independents

COLLEGE BASKETBALL REVIEW

The way things look now, the days of the major independent in college basketball, with the possible exception of Notre Dame, are numbered. For the last 10 years, they've been on the NCAA's endangered species list, almost extinct in upper stratosphere, with only a few bald eagles like the Irish, Marquette, and De Paul hanging on to their nests in the lofty crags.

Now, it looks like they'll go the way of the buffalo, something they have been forced to do just to assure themselves a schedule. Notre Dame, Marquette, De Paul and Dayton—the last big carrier pigeons in the Midwest—have just made a pact to play each other twice a year. It looks to me like this could be a prelude to a conference to catch the remaining independents in the Midwest and East, which could mean that all major independents would sooner or later be associated with some conference.

If and when that happens, the orderly process the NCAA has wanted for years would be complete. It started back when we had 32 teams in the NCAA tourney, when the NCAA created an acceleration toward conferences 10 years ago, promising an automatic tournament berth to the winner of any new conference from 6 to 10 teams. All of a sudden we had conferences like the Metro, Mid-Cities, and Sun Belt, which were formed to take advantage of the situation...and the number of independents began to shrivel.

The problem was, as the number of conferences increased, independents—even the darlings of the boob tube like Notre Dame and De Paul—found they couldn't schedule in January and February because all the schools were tied up in conference play. To assure their schedule, they've entered into this agreement, but my bet is that it will end up as just another conference down the road, with the winner getting that automatic invitation to the NCAA's big party and—Miller Time in March.

It's sad to see the end of major independents. They were always a charming, exciting Alice In Wonderland-type teams who could travel from coast to coast, border to border. They were refreshing, kind of off the normal beaten path, and their schedule wasn't mundane, a 50-year scheduling thing of the same teams every year. You could bring in a Jacksonville, the Air Force Academy, St. John's.

What I liked best about being an independent was that when Cinderella made the ball, ala Notre Dame or Marquette, and went to final four, they got to keep all the money, where Michigan would have to go to nine straight parties to make what the independent made.

If the independents go, it will put an end to the ageless argument about who has the most difficult schedule, the conference school or the independent.

I've always said, all coaches schedule a certain amount of cupcakes, no matter who they are. It's just that with conference schools, their cupcakes are in their conference and they get to play them twice.

The argument against independents is that they have a soft schedule, that they can kinda stroke it. Hey, I admit I would book my six or seven cupcakes every season. But the thing is, the conference teams would have their cupcakes in pre-conference, and then once they started conference play, they had four more cupcakes, too, because they played everybody twice.

Another advantage most conference teams have is that they have three ways to get to the NCAA tournament. The conference team can qualify by winning its conference title, or by winning its post-season conference tournament, or on the basis of its overall record.

On the other hand, the independent school has only one way to show its pedigree—its season record.

Hopefully, Cinderellas like Marquette, Dayton, De Paul and Notre Dame will survive, but right now, it looks like they're the last of the Mohicans.

Poly wrestlers shake bandages, topple Fresno St.

The Cal Poly wrestlers ended their home season Wednesday with a rousing come-from-behind 22-14 victory over Fresno State.

Heavyweight Dennis Townsend gave the Cal Poly fans a final thrill as he reversed an early takedown and pinned Bulldog John O'Brien 56 seconds into the match. O'Brien had been moved up from 190-pounds because Townsend looked to be an easier victim than Poly's regular 190-pounder, Jeff Steward, according to Mustang coach Vaughn Hitchcock.

Steward won the 190-pound bout with a 7-1 decision over former Poly wrestler Scott Bilyeu.

Although happy with the victory and the performance of Steward and Townsend, Hitchcock remained cautious with his praise.

"We had some bright spots, but we still have a lot of changing to do," he said. "I felt we were able to put out the best lineup we have been able to field all season, even though we're missing John Noland and Jeff Chedester. But we're going to have to wrestle better to beat San Jose."

Cal Poly will meet the Spartans on Saturday after traveling to Stanford tonight.

One bright spot for Hitchcock and Poly was the fact that 118-pounder Mike Provenzano was able to wrestle at all. Provenzano not only saved Poly a loss of six points by coming off a bout with illness and only a day's practice to wrestle, but shut out David Yamura 7-0 to give the Mustangs an early 3-0 lead.

But Poly slipped behind as Pablo Saenz scored a 14-6 superior decision over Ernie Geronimo in the 126-pound category.

Chris DeLong defeated Joe Ismay 15-11 in the 134-pound division. The win was a minor upset as Ismay is ranked 12th nationally, one higher than DeLong.

although DeLong has beaten him three times this season.

The 142-pound and 150-pound matches were disappointing for the Mustangs. Durbin Lloren outscored Cesar Escudero 11-9 in the 142-pound bout while at 150-pounds, Allen Richburg decisioned Eric Osborne 6-3.

John Holbrook reversed Robert Juarez in the final seconds of the 158-pound bout to win a 6-5 decision and put Poly back on the winning track.

Third-ranked Sylvester Carver scored a 12-4 superior decision over Danny Romero in the 167-pound match to give Fresno State a 14-9 lead but Roger Sayles cut the margin to 14-13 with a 14-6 superior decision over Gene Ellison at 177-pounds.

Following this weekend's activities, Poly will travel to Terre Haute, Indiana on Friday, Feb. 24, for the Western Regionals at Indiana State University.
